She's Coming To Your House
Some day in the next few months, a woman is going to knock on your door and ask to look inside your house. It won't be a real estate agent or a distributor of Bible tracts. It will be Lauren Elliott, the town assessor for Salisbury, Falls Village, and Goshen, who has been hired to do the basic work on Cornwall's decennial re-assessment.

Elliott has only been waiting for the March snows to melt before she sets out to measure and inspect the roughly 800 residences and other buildings in Cornwall and the land on which they stand. She plans to complete the field work portion of her task over the next three months, so expect her to visit you soon.

After that, she will review past sales to set the framework for assigning values to every parcel of property in the town.

Among the things she will be looking at when she comes to your house are its "style" (cape, colonial, contemporary, etc.), the amount of livable floor space, fireplaces and other amenities, and, perhaps, your view (no decision yet on the value of views). Sales data for recent years, she says, will provide insights as to how to value these features. Also yet undecided is whether to divide "neighborhoods" for land valuation purposes.

The final step in the re-assessment process will be to make policy decisions on how to apply the field and sales data to establish assessments for each property. Barbara Johnson, Cornwall's assessor, will be a major player in that stage of the process.

My advice, when she knocks, is: be polite and invite her in. That will give you a chance to explain why your house really isn't worth nearly as much as it might seem at first glance.

HVRHS Gets Troubling Report
How does Housatonic Valley Regional High School measure up in comparison with similar Connecticut schools? That's what the Region One Board of Education has set out to learn. The initial answer is presented in a recent report titled Benchmark 2000.

For the Benchmark study five other Connecticut high schools were chosen as an Educational Reference Group (ERG). One is Wamogo, the regional school that serves Warren, Morris, and Goshen. The others serve single towns. All ERG schools have from 400 to 650 students, bracketing the 547 currently at HVRHS.

Benchmark 2000 contains a mass of useful data comparing our region and its high school to their ERG counterparts. Here are a few samples from the report:

1. A higher percentage of HVRHS graduates earned credits in foreign languages than in any of the other schools. The same is true of vocational education credits. On the other hand, HVRHS had the lowest percentage of graduates with credits in lab science.

2. In 1998 HVRHS had the lowest percentage of students exceeding state goals on the Connecticut Academic Performance Test in language arts and next to the lowest in math and science.

3. In 1998 (the most recent year for which data are available), HVRHS pupils ranked third best on verbal SAT scores, but tied for last on the Math SAT.

4. HVRHS pupils had the lowest attendance rates in the six-school group. But only Wamogo had a lower dropout rate.

5. HVRHS has a much higher percentage of students (13.6 percent) assigned to special education than any of the other schools.

6. HVRHS has a clear lead in spending. In 1998, it spent $9,861 per pupil, nearly $2,000 or 25 percent more than the ERG average. This happened even though our teacher salaries were the lowest in the group, based on then-current union contracts.

The Region One Board says this is the first in what will be an annual series of benchmark studies. It promises to be a useful report card, telling board members and high school administrators where they need to focus attention. Benchmark findings are also of interest to

It's A Crime!

Once again, Connecticut magazine has ranked the 39 towns in this state with populations under 4,700. It claims the rankings measure the quality of leisure and culture, education, cost of living, economy, and crime. Two years ago, Cornwall was in 19th place. This year, we have moved all the way up to number 1! Once again, our Achilles’ heel is our terrible crime rate.

“What’s that?” you say. “Crime in Cornwall?” Yes, Connecticut says Cornwall has the 38th worst crime rate of all the state’s 39 small towns. Too bad. If only we shared the low sixth-best crime rating of our neighbor, the town of Ridgway discovered two years ago, our high culture, education, cost of living, economy, and crime would have put us in first place, edging out that sixth-best crime rating of our neighbor, the town of Sherman.

Don’t worry, though. Just as Gordon Ridgway discovered two years ago, our high crime rate is the Mohawk Ski Area. Neither murder nor manslaughter, but purloined snowboards and misplaced ski boots constitute our felonies. It could be worse, though. Think of the multitudes who might want to move here if we were Number One. You’re welcome to them, Sherman. —Michael Gannett

Cornwall's Bulging Budget

Over the past month, the Board of Finance has met many times to prepare the budget for fiscal year 2001-02, which begins July 1. It won’t be easy this year.

The Board of Education’s proposed budget is $2.8 million, up a sharp 9.3 percent. A major factor is a whopping 20 percent increase in high school tuition. Our share of high school costs will go up because there will be six more Cornwall pupils at HVRHS next year in contrast to a decline of 11 from other regional towns. This will be coupled with a 6.4 percent increase in the HVRHS budget. Tuition will escalate to $12,700 per pupil.

The Board of Selectmen’s proposed budget is $1 million, up 3.4 percent. Included is the first allocation of operating funds for the new Library building under the 1998 Town-Library Agreement.

On March 15, Finance Board members met to review these proposals. They voted unanimously to ask the selectmen and the Board of Education to reduce their budget proposals by one percent; this means a cut of $10,000 for the selectmen and $28,000 for the Board of Education. The Finance Board members recognized that it will be difficult to make such cuts, but that in light of the projected increases in Cornwall’s budget over the near future they see it as essential to tighten spending.

At a special meeting in mid-February, Finance Board members reviewed an alarming five-year “baseline” budget projection indicating that Cornwall’s mill rate is likely to increase by an average of 8.5 percent a year. This would mean a total rise of about 50 percent by fiscal year 2005-06—unless ways can be found to cut costs or raise revenues from sources other than the property tax.

Cornwall voters will get to see the completed budget at a public hearing on April 27 and to vote on it at Town Meeting on Friday, May 18. Region One will hold a hearing on its budget on April 3; it will go before the Region’s voters in a referendum early in May.

Editors’ Note: As a result of an editing error, last month’s Chronicle mistakenly reported that the 50 percent tax increase projected over the next five years was solely due to rising school expenses. In fact, 50 percent is a total figure, reflecting the potential tax increase to meet all municipal costs.

The Invention Convention

On March 1, CCS Principal Peter Coope opened an all-school assembly by declaring that it was “a day of science for our school.” Students in grades five through eight had been given a challenge to identify, describe, and solve everyday problems using the scientific method. In addition, they had to display and explain their solutions. Judging from the results, there were many “Eureka!” moments.

Keeping their “stuff” tidy and organized was a problem that was imaginatively and practically solved by Stephanie Lynn Kearns’ “Don’t Get Wet Bookcover,” Tyra Lindholm’s “Bookanizer,” Emery Gray’s “Forever Folder,” and Shawna Pattison’s “Locker Keeper.” Samantha Bate’s “Shoe that Carries Makeup,” and Caroline Kosiunko’s “Fabadelic,” a headband with suntan lotion, bug spray, and Chapstick embedded in it took care of problems faced by busy students on the go.

Leaning too far back in chairs and tipping over is a perennial classroom problem solved by Charlie Fox’s “Amazing Chair,” which sports a fifth leg. Also, the problem of getting the right tool when under a car was neatly solved by Steve Hedden and Thomas Kennedy’s “Jack’s Friend,” a toolbox on wheels.

A grand prize and awards for each of the four grades were given out by the project organizers Lucy Prendergast, middle school science teacher, and Lynn Meehan, fifth grade teacher, to a cheering throng of students, parents, and community members. And the winners were: grand prize to Ellen Hart, for her “Handy Stand-Up Christmas Tree Waterer”; first prizes to Hannah Colbert, Charlotte Buck, Padraic Murphy-Saunders, Jessica Savan; second prizes to Caroline Kosiunko, Meredith Gray, Lucia Martin, Alyssa Ackerman; third prizes to Jonathan Coe, Tyler Cheney, Kyle Julian, and Jamie Pastre.

CCS Mastery Scores Fall

“So what went wrong?” Many townspeople recently asked themselves that question when they opened their newspapers to see the showing of Cornwall Consolidated School on the 2000 Connecticut Mastery Tests. Long accustomed to being high in the state standings last year in the top spot, CCS had plummeted to 128th among 163 school districts.

So what did go wrong? One factor, certainly, is that in a small school the scores will jump around from year to year (as Cornwall’s always have) because certain small class groupings will be stronger than certain others. In a huge school this is not true. Also, this year new federal and state rules mandated that at least 80 percent of special education pupils take the test, a regulation that was conveniently ignored in some districts, to Cornwall’s disadvantage. Then, too, when this school year started, about half the teachers were not only new to CCS, but had not had the chance last spring to attend state workshops on the revised format of the tests.

This last reason may be the most important, according to Principal Peter Coope (also new to CCS). Long before the test results were announced, he and the staff developed five school goals for 2001—2004. Realizing these goals, Coope believes, will have a real impact on future CMT scores. —Bob Potter
New Park & Rec. Director

Polly Tobin has been hired by the town to coordinate activities of the Park and Recreation Commission. She succeeds Brian Leonard, who resigned in January. Polly grew up in Cornwall and returned here two years ago after spending time out West directing outdoor education programs. She has a degree in Outdoor Recreation Management from the University of Maine at Machias, and a degree in Recreation and Leisure Administration from California State University in Fresno. Polly joined our Fire Department in January, and is now undergoing the rigorous firefighter training program.

After her first few weeks on the job, Polly notes that Park and Rec. has strong offerings for kids. However, she would like to see more programming for a greater variety of ages. She plans to have office hours in the upstairs room at the Library on Saturday mornings, 10 to noon, and weeknights by appointment. Her office phone is 672-4070, and her home phone is 672-6911.

Polly is now the third Tobin sister on active duty in our town. Connie is Assistant Fire Chief, and Lib is our Recycling Coordinator. You go, girls! —Annie Kosciusko

Heliport Buzzing Again

After considerable controversy, installation of a private helicopter pad at the “Castle” in Coltsfoot Valley was approved by Cornwall’s Planning and Zoning Commission in 1982. Lately, the heliport issue has arisen again because the property is being sold, and the current owners asked whether the special permit is still valid.

When Alexius Conroy bought the Castle in 1988, he divided the property into two lots, owned by separate corporations he controlled. In the same year, heliports were eliminated as an allowed use during a revision of the zoning regulations, i.e., no new heliports.

Recently, the owner asked P&Z to clarify the validity of the 1982 special heliport permit. The minutes of P&Z’s meeting on December 11, 2000, noted that “technically, the ownership of the property by two corporations does violate the conditions of the permit.” But, if the owner was willing to remerge the properties, P&Z indicated that the intent of the restrictions would be maintained, and that the permit would still be valid.

Theodora Bury has now written to P&Z on behalf of Dark Entry Forest and the Dark Entry Forest Preservation Trust, that a brief expression of gratitude seems in order. Please note: A “Shmoo” was a magical creature in the old “Li’l Abner” cartoon, which produced all manner of good things when suitably pressed.

Here’s a toast to Ken K. A fanciful fellow Whose writing is witty Whose manner is mellow He’s an old-fashioned Shmoo. For the rest of us nerds— Just squeeze him a little And out come the WORDS, Like a bounty of jewels In a priceless collection And each of them polished And shaped to perfection! We are thankful for Ken Though we don’t always show it So let’s all raise a glass To the Chronicle’s poet! —Joan Ferriss Leich

Sharing the Cost

The Cornwall Volunteer Fire Department will share the cost of its new rescue/command vehicle with the town. The new vehicle is expected to cost about $200,000. The Fire Department has agreed to pay one-half of the cost between $100,000 and $200,000 and anything over $200,000. The rest will be financed by the town’s capital budget. The firemen have already raised their share of the engine’s cost from contributions and the Bridge Dance. —David A. Grossman
