Earle told us, “but if we don’t get the Flames were now leaping out of the barn roof. “Barns are the most difficult fires to organization, send a check to the Cornwall website at haitianhealthfoundation.org. Meanwhile, up at the farmhouse, EMTs practiced sessions for basketball enthusiasts, (Brutus the dog caught a couple. Two burned rats were later found in traps at the house.) It is surmised that one of this clan had started the fire by chewing a power cord in the milking shed.

I was setting things out for something was going to eat. Thus, we set up garlic. But Sue Ginger, driving to work at 8 A.M., said that it was indeed a still house at the south end of the barn, worried that it might be serious, and went quickly to Lynn and Fred Scoville’s house down the hill. Lynn took one look and called up the sheriff. Fred Scoville’s son on fire” then called 911. Young Fred and Scoville took off up the hill, Lynn, terrified, watched them set sail inside to set out the animals. By now, Fred had taken over, yelling and waving his arms. “Oh my God, my boys are in there!” Will and Charlie Ruse had just arrived. “He was smokin’ and hell in there,” said Steve. The four young men men managed to pull out the windows to clear the smoke; within minutes, Cornwall Volunteer Fire Department personnel wore on the scene, and Fire Chief Earle Tyler jumped in through a window with a fire hose (First Selectman, Gordon Ridgeway holding the other end). Animals almost never want to go out, Earle told us, “but if we don’t get the animals out, we can’t get the roof.

They herded the chickens, geese, beefers, cows, calves, and pigs outside, though Range got the donkey and one of the pigs needed to be prompted with a couple of “boots in the ass” and the old girl had to be carried out.

At first, the firemen got water from the tank, then, after young Fred chained hoses in the hole, from the farm pond and Cream Hill Lake.

Flames were now leaping out of the barn roof. “Barns are the most difficult fires to control,” and, given the high fire doubles every 60 seconds.” And this barn held 10,000 bales of hay. For more information call Debra Tyler at 672-0229.

Art in Cornwall: At the Library, Gail Jacobson’s show Can’t Stop Making Things continues through February 20. On February 23, the Library will be filled with art created by CCS students. A collection of gifts for the artists and community will be held Saturday, February 27, from 10 to 2 P.M. Artwork by Kathleen Love Mooney will be on display at the National Iron Bank this month.

Event the fire personnel but the whole community that turns out.” Weeks
