Our Budget and Theirs

Why can’t the U.S. budget be more like Cornwall’s? Do we rant and rave about deficits? Of course not! We don’t have any. Do we engage in political combat over taxes or outlays? Nonsense!

As of mid-April, Cornwall’s proposed 2012-2013 budget looked like this:

- Board of Selectmen $2,022,719
- Debt Service $197,881
- Board of Education $4,050,804
- TOTAL EXPENSES $6,271,404
- TOTAL REVENUES $6,271,404

That looks a tad neater than the U.S. numbers, which are:

- TOTAL EXPENSES $3.8 trillion
- TOTAL REVENUES $2.9 trillion
- DEFICIT $900 billion

OK, we do have fewer items to worry about, but small budgets can be just as crazy as large ones. Our selectmen, Board of Ed and the Board of Finance, under the leadership of long-time chairman Ralph Gold, have kept ours under control.

“The one unusual item this year is that our share of the high school budget will be up over $100,000,” Ralph said. “The good news is that this is just a one-year blip, and other than that, the CCS and selectmen’s expenses are almost unchanged.”

The overall budget shows a 2.36 percent increase. The mill rate will increase to balance the 15 percent decline in the grand list caused by the revaluation. Your taxes are not likely to change much unless your new valuation differs significantly from the average 15 percent decrease.

The budget will be presented at a town meeting on May 18 at 7:30 P.M. at CCS.

Take a Hike

Cornwall offers abundant opportunities for enjoying nature, both to serious hikers and to the more casual, weekend walker and would-be hiker. Taking your cues from some of the serious hikers among us, there are three principal resources in town: the Mohawk Trail, the Appalachian Trail, and the trails established by the Cornwall Conservation Trust (CCT).

In the early 1980s the Appalachian Trail, the “AT” to aficionados, ran through Cornwall, but it has since moved west, through Sharon, taking its white blazes with it. Fortunately the move left Cornwall with approximately 22 miles of trails now known as the Mohawk Trail or Blue Trail (for its blue blazes).

Two Blue Trails where you can access the AT are on Route 7, just over the bridge heading north from Cornwall Bridge. Both have parking lots. Pine Knob is the first and just north of that is Breadloaf. Taking a break from her work at H.V.A., Patience Lindholm likes to go up Pine Knob for a quick, 22-minute hike and lunch.

Another favorite of serious local hikers is the Blue Trail over Coltsfoot Mountain. One end is in Cornwall Bridge, at the Dark Entry road just beside the Cornwall General Store; the other is in Cornwall Village, just west of the Cheneys’ house. Hugh Cheney often walks that trail but cautions that one has to pay attention because of the many logging roads; a number of people have gotten lost or stuck in recent years.

A year ‘round hiker and trail runner, Jeff Lynch advocates wide trails for warm-weather walking to minimize exposure to ticks. He is partial to a section of the Mohawk Trail opposite the Mohawk Mountain Park entrance on Route 4. For families he suggests The Welles Preserve off Town Street—an easy walk with two loops and a great view. Lynch recommends Connecticut Walk Book West for maps and descriptions.

Barton Jones, the new head of the CCT, keenly feels the need for linked, open, public spaces in this era of increasingly subdivided private properties—like the public walking trails in Great Britain.

Among his recommendations for families is Gold’s Pines. Its parking area, near the Little Guild on Route 128, also serves as the Li’le Guild on Route 128, also serves as the trailhead for a CCT walk over The Day Preserve. The Gold’s Pine walk goes to the right and the CCT trail, temporarily marked with blue tape, goes to the left up to a field below the cobble. For short, 15- to 30-minute walks to suit families with small children (or out-of-shape adults) there is The Hart Farm Preserve, up Cherry Hill Road, or The Ballyhack Preserve, off Route 125 up from Cornwall Village, leading to a scenic ravine. A stone with a Nature Conservancy plaque marks the entrance across from the parking area.

Finally, take a few pointers from the hiking pros: use a map; leave word with someone as to where you are going (and remember, cell phones don’t work everywhere in our town); stay on the trail; bring water and food; dress for the weather and for ticks (light-colored socks over light-colored pants—the better to see the little suckers).

And, because we share our countryside with many creatures, such as snakes, Bart Jones says, “When stepping over a log, always look on the other side, especially if that’s the sunny side.” He’s a former Boy Scout. You gotta listen to Scouts.

To Market, To Market

For some of us, the first signs of spring are robins or daffodils. For others of us, it is the sight of folding tables on Saturday mornings, and well-sharpened knives.

The Cornwall Farm Market begins its sixth season on May 5. Bianca and Richard Griggs have readied the lawn in front of the Wish House for another six months of weekly trodding and trading. Ten vendors offer a wide range of local, organic produce, including grass-fed beef, veal, chicken, fresh eggs, bread, cheese, jams and jellies, and almost anything else you would want on your plate. A new addition this year, the Cornwall General Store will offer coffee and Susan Saccardi’s baked goods, which means you can cover all three daily meals (and snacks and dessert) with one efficient stop.

The market started with Motherhouse and Stone Wall Vegetable Farm, and from Bianca’s vision to community support, the market has become a vital mainstay and civic groups at no charge.

You can check the website/blog at cornwallfarmmarket.org for weekly specials, events and offerings. Or better yet, stop by and see for yourself and bring a knife. And a fork.

Senior Survey 2012 and More

Every day is someone’s birthday, and every day is an aging day. The new Committee on the Aging hopes to change the name to the more precise Committee for Seniors. The intent is that the committee will inform and enrich the lives of senior citizens in relation to all Cornwallians. There are about the same number of folks over 65 as under 21, (it might be helpful to add a couple of categories—young adults [16-21] and young seniors [50-65]). All have their special interests and concerns, and many overlap.

The survey insert in your Chronicle is meant to direct the focus of the committee. Committee Chair Jane Prentice expressed hope to me that returns would not only indicate interests but also add comments and ideas. In addition, members Paul Baren, Bob Potter, Lucy Kling, Bronwyn O’Shaughnessy, May Dzenuts, and Margaret Haske are all open for conversations on senior topics.

Because we are spread out in our rural town, one of the biggest concerns is communicating, getting around, and seeing each other. The phone is good for one-on-one, but to be with others is often a challenge. Communicating through computer, email, websites, and chat pages is increasingly popular, even with seniors. The committee is developing a senior web page link to the CornwallCT site as a way for sharing ideas and planning events. A plan for lunches at a local eatery with informative programs is in the works. A senior resources shelf has been organized at the Library. While FISH provides rides for medical appointments, car pooling could be arranged for outings.

The Committee for Cornwall Seniors expects to make good things happen, especially for seniors.

—Ginny Potter

According to the Connecticut Department of Agriculture, there are more than 120 farmers’ markets registered in the state, but the Cornwall market has earned a unique reputation, with some of its vendors invited to join other markets. It seems that homemade vinegar, knife sharpening and “other curiosities” are not as commonplace as they are in Cornwall. As in other years, there will be special events and music (with at least one enthusiastic request for bagpipes). While vendor space is full for the season, open space is available for young, local entrepreneurs and civic groups at no charge.

New Spin for an Old Craft

Knitting groups have come and gone in our town over the years. Whether it was making scarves and socks for the troops in WWII, knitting hats for the homeless or trying to reconnect with what Grandma taught, the needles have always been clicking, if not in a klatch then solo, and now with a technological twist.

Becky Savan Aguilar, young mother of three sons, looks forward to her nightly knitting as a time to unwind and relax. Not surprisingly, she loves to knit baby things, especially tiny hats. She hits the craft fair circuit, has gotten commissions through word-of-mouth and also has a “shop” on Etsy.com, the crafters’ online site. Becky is so obsessed with knitting that a few years back her thoughtful husband bought her three alpacas to supply her yarn.

Lisa Cruse feels that ravelry.com, a social networking group boasting two million subscribers, has changed her knitting life. She uses the name “Ambrosia Cottage” on this and other websites where she shares her ideas, designs, and photos with hundreds of “friends” day or night. Hats, her specialty, are felted or “fulled” and embellished with ideas from the heart: ribbon, beads, cut felt, embroidery, or what corresponds to her watchword of classic elegance.

Upon entering Cornwallian Nancy Hamilton’s Black Sheep Yarns in Kent, one is immersed in the comfortable atmosphere she nurtures. Not only will she teach a novice to knit free, but her cozy shop is open to help with any tangled problems or just to share a cuppa and some conversation. She fosters a sense of community by being the sole supplier of “Sam’s Wool,” Icelandic wool from Cornwall’s Birdseye & Tanner Brooks Farm. Since last October her radio program/podcast “Fiber Arts with Nancy” has been a feature on Sharon’s WHHD.

Trash is Key

create pieces with recycled materials to display and sell. On the 21st and 22nd of April, people came from all over town to view the art, vote on their favorite pieces and, in some cases, buy them. Thirty percent of all funds are donated to the CCS art department. This year, a printing press was purchased for the CCS art room with the proceeds.

In years past, Art at the Dump has seen many different types of art: jewelry, sculptures, mobiles, statues, and more. Artists use everything from cloth to soda cans to Styrofoam. In 2006, there were mobiles made out of feathers and a necklace made out of dominoes. Pablo Picasso also made sculptures out of found objects, such as his Pregnant Woman made of earthenware pitchers. Nam June Paik made spectacular pieces out of old television sets. More affordable (but equally inspiring) are pieces by Cornwall artists and students. A few years ago, we ended up with a steel wastebasket decorated with 72 car keys, by local artist Leslie Murray. Our takeaway: trash is key.

Cornwall Briefs

• Foreclosure proceedings regarding the cost of tearing down the old Rumsey Hall building are currently taking place at the courthouse in Litchfield. The town, represented by attorney Perley Grimes, is seeking to recover the $50,000 it cost to demolish the building, designated a hazardous structure by the state. Andrew Hingson owns the building. The Chase Bank holds the mortgage. The first selectman expects the court to side with Cornwall and require one of the two parties to come up with the money.

• Budget voting: There will be a machine vote at the Town Hall on the high school budget on May 8, to be followed ten days later, on May 18, 7:30 p.m. at CCS, with a meeting and vote on the town budget, expected to come in at $6,271,404. Of that, more than half, $4.05 million, will be budgeted for education and another $200,000 toward paying the bond on the school addition.

• Our almost snowless winter has saved the town about $25,000 on the cost of sand and salt for the roads and allowed the road crew to dedicate considerable early time to tree work. The first selectman also mentioned there was less plow-generated wear on the work. The first selectman also mentioned there was less plow-generated wear on the work. The first selectman also mentioned there was less plow-generated wear on the work.

• Civilian Emergency Response Team: These are the people who would leap to the fore in case the town faced another emergency like our week-long power outage last fall. There are 18 men and women, lead by Nev Dunn, who took a special seven-week course to receive certification.

BRAND AWARENESS

Every year my spring clean-up includes walking the three-fourths mile from my house to Route 7 and back up with trash bags in hand— one for recyclable cans and bottles and the other for paper waste. This year’s “takes” were mixed bags. First the beverage containers:

• Bud wins by a landslide—47 of 31 beer cans. Those Super Bowl ads are really working. Or is it that Bud imbibers are just lazy?

• Non-alcoholic beverages made a “good” showing: 11 energy drinks, six water, five milk/juice, three Pepsi, one Coke, two tea. Makes you wonder—exercise at the gym but can’t walk the can to your recycling receptacle?

• So where are we? 51 alcoholic to 28 non-alcoholic. That’s good.

But here’s the best. Only one spirits bottle. Alcohol content has dropped. On the paper side, some more “good news.” Cigarette packs are way down; however, Marlboro continues to dominate market share: five Marlboro to one Basic. Fast food is part of our habitat, unfortunately: MacDonalds and Burger King are tied at four each, then comes Dunkin Donuts with three and disappointingly one Eco Products. On that last one, how can someone who buys a product for its environmental goodness toss it into the woods? Go figure.

All in all discouraging on the amount of lazy littering going on in our pristine environment, but hats off to 1) the product managers for their market share of bad behavior, and 2) those who litter cutting back on some of their more toxic consumption habits.

TAX HELP

Cornwall’s Tax Collector is looking for a part-time clerk to help in her office early June through the first week of August, and again mid-December through the first week of February. Must be available Mondays 1 to 4 p.m. and Wednesdays 9 a.m. to noon and 1 to 4 p.m. There will also be opportunities to fill in when the collector is away. Candidate must be able to use a computer, deal with the public, be good with numbers, and be able to create accurate deposits. This is an ideal position for a retired individual looking for a little extra income. If interested please call 672-2705, or email cutaxes@optonline.net. — Jean Bouteiller

ALL HANDS IN KITCHEN

Over the years, the CCS kitchen has hosted many community gathering and fundraising events, with either limited (no cutting board!) or oddly abundant (23 tablespoon measures!) kitchen supplies. In an effort to help facilitate and support future events, the PTA has created a wish list of much needed kitchen items.

We prefer new, but lightly used will not be shunned. We are accepting donations during May, all items left in the school kitchen in the PTA donation box. If a cash donation is easier, please make checks payable to CCS PTA and marked “kitchen” and we will purchase the supplies!

Dinner forks (metal, no plastic please), rubber spatulas (long-handled), rolling pin, measuring cups (glass, 2 or 4 cups), baking pans, (non-coated, no larger than 16” by 24”), pitchers (2 or 3 quarts), mixing bowls, (stainless steel, 3 to 6 quart size), baking dishes (Pyrex, 3 quart or larger), muffin tins (non-coated), large clear storage containers (1 to 4 quart size).

BUMP IN THE SOLAR/WIND ROAD

The April editors reported on a Cell You Light (CYL) proposal to build a combination solar/wind-cell tower on the former Rumsey Hall land. What a great idea, and so Cornwall! However, there is a small bump in the road. Gordon Ridgway tells me that the Rumsey land was recently purchased by the Sisters of Mercy in Waterbury. He also said that CYL’s president, John Shellie, has submitted a generous purchase agreement to the Sisters. So the project will have to wait till the nun signs Shellie.
